Providing peace of mind in a changing security environment

SECURITY AUDIT & REVIEW

Security Management is critical in today's challenging environment, regardless of industry or scale of organisation. But is having a security management plan in place enough?

We, at SAR, think the presence of a security management plan is not enough. All organisations, regardless of industry or scale require a regular systematic assessment of existing security infrastructure.

Contact us at SAR to discuss your 2016 audit; you have a duty of care to your employees to ensure your security infrastructure is fit for purpose. Don't wait for an incident to influence a review.

Security Audit & Review

What does a security audit entail?

- A systematic assessment of existing security infrastructure.

Why conduct a security audit?

- To review compliance in an independent manner
- To ensure proper implementation of policy and procedures
- To perform due diligence in the form of independent oversight
- To provide peace of mind to staff and instil confidence in security management
- To better direct resources with regard to security.

Who needs a Security Audit?

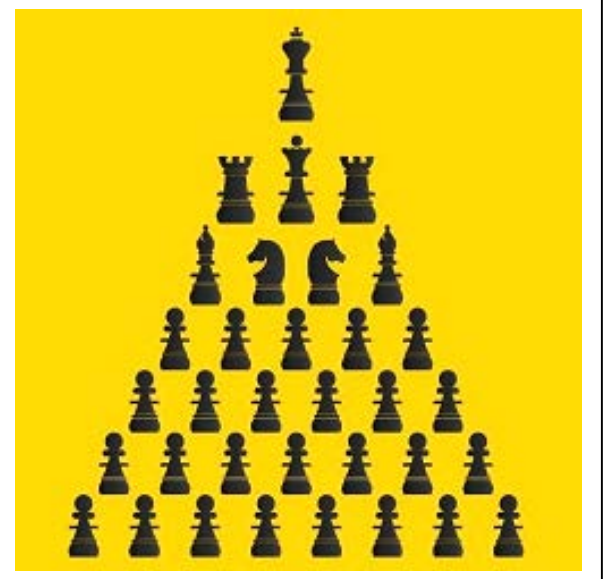

- All organisations, regardless of industry or scale, should conduct a regular security audit.

When should an audit be reviewed?

- An annual security audit should be conducted, unless significant changes have occurred to the nature of the security environment in which an organisation is operating. If such changes occur, a systematic assessment may be required sooner.

How is an audit conducted?

- A proven methodology is used to perform a systematic assessment of existing security infrastructure.
